

A transdermal therapeutic system having a backing layer, at least one nicotine-containing layer or zone, which may have pressure-sensitive properties, as well as a removable protective layer is characterized by a content of at least one essential oil extracted from a mint species, or at least one monoterpene ketone contained in these essential oils.